Built in 1995, the building is one of several dozen such facilities across the country based on a design originally used at Harvard University.

Attached to the storage modules are offices, ample space for the processing of collections, and a general reference room for the use of researchers interested in accessing the Ohio State University Archives and Photo Archives, the collections of the Byrd Polar Research Center Archival Program, and the collections of the Ohio Congressional Archives.

THE OHIO CONGRESSIONAL ARCHIVES

AT THE OHIO
STATE UNIVERSITY

Purpose

The purpose of the Ohio Congressional Archives is to make available for research and educational use unique and historical material documenting:

- The workings and history of the U.S. Congress
- The participation and contributions of Ohio members of the U.S. Congress
- The impact of the U.S. Congress on the history of the State of Ohio

To fulfill its goal to document, on a non-partisan basis, the accomplishments and activities of Ohio Members of Congress, the Ohio Congressional Archives collects and preserves the following types of material.

- The papers and related materials of members of the Ohio delegation to the U.S. Congress compiled while in office
- The papers and related materials of members of the Ohio delegation compiled during their careers prior to or after their service in the U.S. Congress
- The papers and related materials of personal advisors and staff personnel to members of the Ohio delegation to the U.S. Congress
- Oral histories of Ohio members of the U.S. Congress, their political advisors, and key staff members
- The papers and related materials of individuals who actively campaigned for but failed to win election to a seat in the Ohio delegation to the U.S. Congress

Background

The collections of manuscripts, photographs, and related materials compiled by members of the U.S. Congress represent a significant resource in the study of the legislative branch of the federal government. The official records of Congress are mandated by law for preservation by the National Archives and Records Administration. However, the personal papers of individual members - the “other half” to the story of Congress - in many cases are not preserved. Our collective understanding of Congress therefore diminishes due to a lack of primary documents for use by students, educators, and scholars.

The Ohio Congressional Archives is one of eleven Special Collections housed by The Ohio State University Libraries. Established in 2004, the archives is an outgrowth of the recommendation put forth by the Third Report of the Advisory Committee on the Records of Congress (S.Pub.106-52, Dec. 31, 2000) for the “development (within each state) of statewide Public Policy Centers that include a strong archival component with a focus on political and public policy documentation.”

The report stressed the advantages gained by centralizing similar collections at a dedicated repository, both in staffing resources and in the accessibility of collections to researchers. It also emphasized the need for good record management practices within Congressional offices and urged Members to choose a permanent repository for their records early in their term of office.

On June 20, 2008, the 110th Congress passed House Concurrent Resolution 307, “Expressing the Sense of the Congress that Members’ congressional papers should be properly maintained” and that members should arrange for the donation of their papers to a research institution properly equipped to care for them. The Ohio Congressional Archives serves this function for members of the Ohio Congressional Delegation.
